Eldora Carter—jobless, homeless, and family-less—suddenly finds herself escorting three orphaned children cross-country on the train from Missouri to Colorado. What should have been an easy job, however, quickly becomes a nightmare as each child presents a different crisis. If it wasn't for Sam Mackenzie, they'd have been put off the train long ago.

When an avalanche halts their progress, Sam and Eldora both must learn to trust God like never before for life, health, safety, security...even family and love. Can God be trusted to put things together when, despite all their efforts, they've failed so miserably?
