The Nagas are the hill tribes of Northeast India. Renowned for their former ancient practice of head-hunting, their way of life changed dramatically in the late 19th century. As a result, generations of Nagas lost their legends, rituals and beliefs. What remains today are the distant memories of a communal life and of customs and traditions as retained by the wise elders. These practices were once passed on from generation to generation through the oral tradition and have now been recorded in this book. The Nagas consist of many tribes, which, though similar in cultural and social mores, often differ in their ornaments, attire, headdress, and weave of their famous colourful shawls. The rare black and white photographs contained here, portray this rich heritage and provide a glimpse into the past of these hill people. This book deals prominently with the Tangkhul Naga Tribe and contains many of their ballads and folktales that recount their unique history. In today's world of vanishing customs and of the mundane replacing the mystic, their feasts and festivals, myths and ceremonies, bring alive a vibrant portrayal of their identity.
